The paperless office, five years later

This presentation will cover how a hesitant Deloitte Office Partner, Rick Bublitz, changed “traditional white-paper accounting firm” habits to a new forum. As reported some years ago in the Vancouver Sun, Deloitte’s Langley accounting office “scrapped paper and went entirely digital”.

Rick will discuss how he managed the change and succeeded in Langley’s Deloitte office providing the “beta test” for Deloitte headquarters in Toronto.

“In planning to move from a location that we had occupied for 30 years we discovered a new way to conduct our business, invest in tools that could take us into the future and save money on space that traditionally was not productive. We had already converted to paperless audit and tax programs and with the move to the new office we completed the transition to a paperless office.

Traditionally, professional services firms were paper intensive, and I had some reservations that all of our people could change how they worked. It was very gratifying to see everyone making the effort to adopt the new processes and watch how the younger people committed to teach the tenured members of our staff to work on screen.

Although we craved better HVAC, more parking and an elevator we created an environment that attracts top talent and produces exceptional results for our clients.”

Speaker

Rick Bublitz, CPA, CA.

Rick was a Deloitte Audit Partner and Office Managing Partner. He retired in the summer of 2017.

Rick now spends his time at his cottage in central BC, working on antique vehicles, coaching baseball and helping CPAs set the stage for digital paperless offices.
